Tools for excellence: This is a one-stop repository of resources for productivity and self-improvement. The page is hosted on Patreon --a platform that provides business tools for creators to run a subscription content service, as well as ways for artists to build relationships and provide exclusive experiences to their subscribers, or "patrons." TTT on LinkedIn: While I have enjoyed the comments and the reactions I have received from so many of you to the newsletters, I wanted a platform on which we could interact on a more personal and immediate basis. I've recently activated my LinkedIn page for 'Thinking - Teaching - Talking' and would be delighted to have you join me.

Curated and enhanced content, once a week

This is a newsletter of curated content directed at people who are tired of reading nothing but bad and depressing news in the mainstream media. The content in this site will be of interest to:

- People who like to think critically.
- People who like to teach young minds how to think critically.
- People who like to communicate - speaking, writing, engaging in forums - critically assessed information to interested audiences; I would like to offer Richard Saul Wurman's phrase, "Information architect", as a descriptor.

Arjun Rajagopalan

My professional life of four decades was spent as a surgeon, educator and medical administrator. I am now retired from active practice and when I reflect on my life and ask myself what did I do that could be now redirected to a larger audience, three things pop up: thinking, teaching, talking.
